OFFICE ART

Jörg Wettlaufer, Kiel.

The deep-rooted desire to enhance our work-environments with art has already produced plenty of unexpected results. The following pictures reveal a particularly candid insight into the work life of medical staff in the late 1990s. Although a belated appearance in the art world years after its inception, its impact as testimony of a culture and its context is certainly not abated.

The artistic expression and reproduction of ourselves at the office is ultimately always a sexual expression too. If at all - evidence is needed of this basic thesis of materialism, then it can be found at the Hôpital Pitié Salpêtrière in Paris. The nexus between sexual and material reproduction is certainly more evident at closer inspection than at first sight. Our society reproduces itself not just through business and work, but especially whilst eating. Art at places of work can thus be found primarily within canteens, where physical and spiritual recreation (a precursor to any reproduction) occurs most often.

Let's take a closer look at these works by exploring first the artists; who, it shall be noted, will remain anonymous. They would probably prefer to stay that anyway. They are all young men at the beginning of their artistic careers, perhaps in their early to mid-twenties. I cannot say whether a female artist also graces these walls, but the subjects are predominantly male. Further indication supports this assumption, as the neighbouring room bears similar paintings as this one - a room which obviously houses occult male rituals. Rituals of initiation are always bizarre and sometimes even dangerous. This is particularly true for the French academic system with its repressive and authoritarian tenor that does not leave a lot of room for creativity and individual artistic expression. Peer pressure and creativity thus culminates in the safe environment of the „bizutage“ (initiation rituals). Male community is the centre of the raison d'être; the ritual is also tellingly called „inscription au phallus“.

But, and this shall be stressed: recipients of these paintings hanging on these walls are not exclusively male and the audience is limited due to the venue, which explains the subjects. Colleagues that are usually assisted by passing them scalpels can be seen in enraptured and enchanted poses and expressions - giving room to let imaginations of eroticism and post-adolescence run wild.

If this case of subliminal messaging amongst French scrubs induces a waving of the moral forefinger, then consider this: an open and uninhibited confrontation with the subconscious has never hurt anyone. And indeed, Sigmund Freud was a visiting fellow in 1885 for four months, working at Hôpital de la Salpêtrière as a young doctor. Freud was there to study the connection between hysteria and sexuality from the father of neurology, Jean-Martin Charcot...

THE USSR—CANADA: GOODNEIGHBOURLINESS, COOPERATION AND TRADE

HOW CAN I THANK YOU? I'VE GOT MONEY...

A CASINO FIFTY STORES UP

TROUBLE.

Though the Soviet Union and Canada appear far apart on the map, the only thing that actually divides them is the North Pole.

During the Second World War the USSR and Canada stood together against the fascist menace which threatened the nations. In 1942, our two countries established diplomatic relations. Though the past decades have seen both ups and downs in our relations, we in the Soviet Union remember that back in 1955 Canada was one of the first countries in the West to approve the principles (which our country advanced) of peaceful coexistence among states with different sociopolitical systems. This helped to promote business and cultural relations between us.

The two countries have concluded important intergovernmental accords, such as the Long-Term Agreement to Facilitate Economic, Industrial, Scientific and Technical Cooperation.

The similar climatic conditions of the two countries enable our scientists to tackle on a joint basis the problems of ecology and the rational use of natural resources.

The USSR and Canada have been cooperating in sea fishing for over 30 years in the north-western Atlantic. This is one of the most productive areas among the world's seas and oceans and the use of its fish resources is of special importance both for Canada and the USSR. It is therefore only natural that our first business contacts concerned fishing.

Canada grants foreign ships, including those from the Soviet Union, the right to call at its ports on the Atlantic coast (Saint John's and Halifax) and the Pacific coast (Vancouver and Prince Rupert). There Soviet fishermen do the necessary maintenance work and take on board drinking water and provisions.

The leading fishing-industry institutes in Moscow, Murmansk and Kaliningrad actively cooperate with the Bedford Institute of Oceanography and the St. John's Fisheries Research Laboratory. Soviet and Canadian scientists study the Atlantic's resources and give recommendations on the best ways to use them.

The 1981 intergovernmental Soviet-Canadian agreement on cooperation in agriculture offered enormous prospects in this field. The two countries exchange delegations of scientists and specialists, scientific and technological information and samples of seeds and planting stock and conduct joint symposia.

Soviet poultry experts cooperate successfully with the Shaver poultry breeding farms, and seedsmen with Osco Incorporated. Cooperation covers quite a wide range of problems concerning livestock breeding, plant growing, land utilization, farm mechanization, land improvement and the use of mathematical methods and computers in agriculture.

Soviet-Canadian economic relations have been much more active in recent years. Irregular commercial deals have now given place to planned and stable cooperation on a long-term basis.

Soviet turbines for power stations, farm machinery, "Lada" cars, machine tools and other equipment can often be seen in Canada. Grain and heavy-duty dump trucks are the main items which Canada exports to the Soviet Union. The trade bridge between the two countries is constantly being used. In 1986, the volume of trade exchange reached nearly 1,500 million roubles. But this is by no means all. There are good opportunities for expanding contacts in the oil, gas and timber industries, agriculture, metallurgy, scientific and technological exchanges, etc.

Soviet and Canadian specialists are successfully working in the field of airport construction, enhancing the safety of airliners, developing systems for the prevention of glazed frost and improving on the design of a mobile airfield station.

These are all promising signs for future Soviet-Canadian economic cooperation.

DEATH TO EVERYONE

a short story by
Mae Saslaw

The next thing Mara wanted to tell me about had to do with the stock market. It's all fallen the fuck apart, she said. The kinda fire I'd like to see get started down on Wall Street, she said. She'd get the Fed and the Feds confused all the time, like there wasn't a difference between the men in suits who came to get you in the middle of the night when there was something suspect in the house and the men in suits who stole the gold and then let it all burn. I told her it was gonna take way longer this time around, no Black Monday, no Black Tuesday, just a bunch of us all rappelling down the graph mountain all at once. She told me to get the bungee cords, because we were gonna jump even if they weren't. Mara wanted to head down to the Seaport to watch for stockbrokers falling out of the sky. It's raining men, she said. Not yet. But anyway we hopped a train and rode down to the center of everything, where all the cameras and long lines of cars with tinted windows and cops on horses went to pay attention to something. What a worthless zip code, a great big fire escape. If any streets can remember traumas it's these streets. This is how I explained the thing to Mara: It's going to happen a lot slower this time, so slow you don't notice, like how people get older and wars get lost. It's vague, I told her, big red numbers that won't mean anything until we've already forgotten what kept happening all month on the news. She said she didn't see how anything was vague. As far as Mara could tell, down at the Stock Exchange, they had a bear, and they had a big room with no floor at all. Nothing vague about that. Bear, no floor. The next day Mara went out and got herself a brand new set of politics. After that she fell in love with every man she saw in that zip code, but not a one would buy her dinner.

Catty

I found these photos in a family album. It was a relative I had heard about but didn't really know much about. Catty played baseball from around 1926-1938 and coached until 1955. Then died in 1963 while crossing the street in busy traffic.

The back of this photo says "Hey Slugger," but Catty never made it.

Catty and the team pose on a cold day in Chicago, along with their manager, coach, and owners. Back says "So long danny, Chicago 1955".

This photo must be from a significant moment in his career, the back says "dealbreaker, 1938"

His love of the game followed him into retirement. It looks like he became a fan of the SF giants. I wonder who the nose on the right belongs to.

You can tell from my turban and my last name. If you see a man with a turban, it usually means he's a Sikh. All Sikhs also have the last name SINGH – but, not all SINGH are Sikhs.

☪ Our religion is called Sikhism

☪ Do Sikh women wear turbans too?
No – Sikh women do not wear any head covering

☪ Where do Sikhs come from?
We are from the state of Punjab in India and speak the language Punjabi

☪ What do Sikhs believe in?
We believe in one God and do not worship idols.

☪ Sikhism is the fifth largest monotheistic religion in world, after Islam and Christianity.

☪ We call God "Waheguru," meaning "the supreme teacher"

☪ We believe that everything God gives us is precious, so we never cut our hair

☪ We believe that men and women are born equal

☪ We also believe in monogamy (having only one wife or husband)

☪ We believe that it is our choice to make our life on earth either heaven or hell

☪ We believe in reincarnation (to be born again) after death

☪ We worship God through prayer, yoga, vegetarian living, and living with respect for mankind. We are a peaceful people and tolerant of others' religion.

☪ Unfortunately, some Sikhs have been mistaken for terrorists and become targets of hate crimes, including murder

One personal pronoun is enough to address men, women, whatever lies between, and any lifeform capable of producing something like language. It should still be possible to identify people by their sex, but only as a linguistic exception, not in everyday life.

We have to define a new personal pronoun! There have been faint-hearted attempts, but there is room for radical improvement. Minds matter, not reproductory glands.
